Outlook
We remain positive about the outlook for European equities, which combine exposure to powerful global trends and a potential economic revival driven by meaningful change and structural reforms.

Investment environment

- European equities delivered strong gains in 2025, helped by easier borrowing conditions alongside rising defence and infrastructure spending in Europe.
- Concerns about US import tariffs weighed on investor sentiment at times, particularly following US President Donald Trump's April "Liberation Day" announcement. However, trade relations later improved, and the EU reached an agreement with the US to reduce tariffs.
- The European Central Bank (ECB) implemented four 25 basis point (bps) rate reductions in the first half of the year, lowering the deposit rate to 2.0%, although it announced no further cuts. Inflation was largely rangebound near the ECB's 2% target, easing from an annual rate of 2.5% in January to 2.0% in December.
- Eurozone GDP growth was somewhat lacklustre, but optimism about the expansionary fiscal policies and pro-growth reforms aided equity performance. Third-quarter GDP growth was upgraded to 0.3%, which marked an improvement from the second quarter's 0.1% expansion.
- The euro gained markedly against the US dollar, hitting a four-year high in mid-September. This was largely due to the divergence between monetary policy in the US and the eurozone.
- Political turmoil continued in France, where a fourth prime minister in a year was appointed and lawmakers failed to agree the 2026 budget, pushing the negotiations into the new year.

Portfolio review

Several of the holdings in the European banking sector, including UniCredit, Erste Bank, BBVA and Deutsche Bank, were among the leading positive contributors. These lenders posted strong results over the year, reflecting the more favourable operating environment for the sector. European banking stocks continued to look reasonably valued to us, despite greatly improved profitability and stronger balance sheets, and even as regulation is potentially becoming less of a headwind.

Siemens Energy (a new purchase during the year) was another outperformer. The firm provides equipment and services to the power industry and has benefited from sustained favourable supply-demand dynamics in the gas turbine market, driven by increasing global energy demand. Rheinmetall (another new purchase) also boosted performance. Shares in the German defence company performed well for much of the year amid the anticipated increases in defence spending in Germany and across Europe.

Conversely, detractors included ASML. The Dutch semiconductor capital equipment company succumbed to weakness in the technology sector earlier in the period, caused by concerns about some firms' large artificial intelligence (AI)-related capital spending programmes. We subsequently sold ASML but reinvested in September. Although this allowed us to benefit from a rally that began in mid-July, not holding the stock earlier in the third quarter adversely impacted performance.

Shares in Adidas also underperformed. Although the sportswear firm posted some strong financial results during the year, including record third-quarter revenues, its shares underperformed due to concerns about the impact that trade tariffs would have on costs and sales. We subsequently exited the position to allocate funds to stocks where we have higher conviction.

German design and construction software company Nemetschek also weighed on relative gains. Performance was solid early in the period, but as the year progressed investors became increasingly speculative about possible AI disruption on software businesses. Information and analytics company RELX and advertising and communication firm Publicis were also impacted by concerns about AI disruption.

In terms of activity, several of the aforementioned bank stocks were new additions during the year. Other purchases in the sector included ABN Amro, FinecoBank and UBS. Swiss healthcare company Roche was another new position. The company has faced challenges for some time, due to concerns about upcoming patent expiries for some of its key drugs. However, there were some positive developments in terms of the firm's new product pipeline in November, including favourable results from an early read-out of a clinical trial for its experimental breast cancer drug. Spanish multinational electric utility Iberdrola was another addition. The stock has substantial exposure to electricity grids, which we view as a key area of long-term structural growth as the rising share of renewables adds greater volatility to electricity supply. We also purchased civil engineering and infrastructure firm ACS, and building materials company Heidelberg Materials, which we think stand to benefit from the increased fiscal spending plans in several countries.

Given the difficulty in predicting with any certainty which companies will ultimately thrive as AI leaders and which may face significant challenges, we sold out of the aforementioned Publicis. We also took profits in SAP and exited the holding amid the uncertainty about the impact of AI. Elsewhere, we initially scaled back the position in Novo Nordisk early in the year before fully exiting the position due to concerns about the competitive backdrop for its weight loss drug in the US. We also reduced the fund's exposure to the AI theme, exiting the positions in BESI and ASM International, in order to consolidate our semiconductor equipment exposure in ASML, where we feel prospects are more compelling at this point.

Manager outlook

2025 was a strong year for European stock markets, with most indices delivering double-digit gains. One of the key attractions of the European market is its combination of exposure to powerful global trends and optionality linked to a revitalisation of domestic economic prospects. After several years of subdued growth, this domestic revival theme gained prominence in 2025, driven by the prospect of a broad reform agenda encompassing defence capabilities, competition policy, EU coordination on industrial policy, grid modernisation, digitalisation, and regulatory reforms in the financial sector. The latter aims to mobilise Europe's vast excess savings and capital to improve and deepen funding conditions for the real economy – a lever we view as the most impactful card European authorities still have to play.

Taking stock after a busy twelve months with many corresponding initiatives launched, it seems like the rate of change is swinging in the right direction. However, while notable progress has been made in areas such as defence capability rebuilding, German infrastructure initiatives, the easing of regulatory burdens on supply chain reporting and electric vehicle (EV) transition, reforms at the EU level continue to advance more slowly and less comprehensively than we would like. Against this backdrop of disappointingly lengthy timelines when it comes to EU reforms, we believe this is an opportune moment to become more selective on domestic opportunities and to re-emphasise the global dimension of the opportunity set available in the European market. Global macroeconomic tailwinds–driven by anticipated monetary policy easing and a likely more stable trade environment–should provide a supportive backdrop for Europe's global champions.

We continue to manage the fund with a focus on idiosyncratic stock selection and, in this context, maintain a balanced portfolio comprising a mix of cyclical and typically more defensive stocks.

The FTSE World Europe (Ex UK) Index is a measure of the combined performance of large and medium sized companies from developed and advanced emerging European stock markets excluding the UK. It provides a useful comparison against which the Fund's performance can be assessed over time.
The Investment Association (IA) groups funds with similar geographic and/or investment remit into sectors. The Fund's ranking within the sector (as calculated by a number of data providers) can be a useful performance comparison against other funds with similar aims.

Investment policy

The Fund invests at least 80% of its assets in shares (also known as equities) of companies, of any size, in any industry, in Europe (excluding UK). Companies will be incorporated, headquartered, listed on an exchange in, or deriving significant revenue from, this region. The Fund may also invest in other assets including cash and money market instruments. The Investment Manager may use derivatives (complex financial instruments) to reduce risk or to manage the Fund more efficiently. The Fund is actively managed with reference to the FTSE World Europe Ex UK Index, which is broadly representative of the companies in which it may invest, as this can provide a useful comparator for assessing the Fund's performance. The Investment Manager has discretion to choose investments for the Fund with weightings different to the index or not in the index. As an additional means of assessing the performance of the Fund, the IA Europe ex UK sector average, which is based on a peer group of broadly similar funds, may also provide a useful comparator.

Investment strategy

The Investment Manager looks to anticipate catalysts for change in companies and industries based on fundamental research and thought leadership, in order to construct a portfolio of large companies complemented by mid-size company opportunities with the potential to enhance the Fund's overall returns. Smaller companies are not normally a significant focus of the portfolio.

Fund specific risks

Shares/Units can lose value rapidly, and typically involve higher risks than bonds or money market instruments. The value of your investment may fall as a result. Shares of small and mid-size companies can be more volatile than shares of larger companies, and at times it may be difficult to value or to sell shares at desired times and prices, increasing the risk of losses. If a Fund has a high exposure to a particular country or geographical region it carries a higher level of risk than a Fund which is more broadly diversified. The Fund may use derivatives with the aim of reducing risk or managing the portfolio more efficiently. However this introduces other risks, in particular, that a derivative counterparty may not meet its contractual obligations. If the Fund holds assets in currencies other than the base currency of the Fund, or you invest in a share/unit class of a different currency to the Fund (unless hedged, i.e. mitigated by taking an offsetting position in a related security), the value of your investment may be impacted by changes in exchange rates. Securities within the Fund could become hard to value or to sell at a desired time and price, especially in extreme market conditions when asset prices may be falling, increasing the risk of investment losses. The Fund could lose money if a counterparty with which the Fund trades becomes unwilling or unable to meet its obligations, or as a result of failure or delay in operational processes or the failure of a third party provider.
