Macro backdrop

As has been the case for some time, Covid-19 and the responses by governments remain the dominant forces in driving markets and investor sentiment. However, we are beginning to see other factors and the consequences of responses to Covid-19 are beginning to give investors pause for thought. These include, but are not limited to, geopolitical tensions (China/Taiwan), President Biden's tax proposals, semiconductor chip shortages, rising input costs (raising a question around inflation) and speculation about the effects and success of the eventual unwinding of the current very accommodative fiscal and monetary conditions. Mutations in the Covid-19 virus and shortages of vaccines continue to take their toll to varying degrees around the world, and it seems to be the case more recently that poorer countries are being harder hit by Covid-19. In all likelihood, we think this will hasten calls for a more equal society and strengthen ESG as a movement.

Fund performance and activity

Over the month the fund returned 0.1% against a benchmark return of 2.2%.

Outlook/strategy

We are part way through the first quarter results season and it has been noticeable that many companies which have either matched or beaten expectations have seen their share prices weaken slightly. While equity markets appear well supported by the aforementioned fiscal and monetary conditions, we think this probably means that gains from current levels will come less from multiple expansion and more from further underlying business improvements.
