Investment environment

- European equities fell in the third quarter, as pricing pressures, geopolitical tensions and sharp rises in bond yields (falling prices) weighed on investor sentiment.
- Performance was subdued in July, given a sharp reassessment of the artificial intelligence (AI) investment theme, while an upsurge in fighting between the US and Iran pushed energy prices higher.
- Robust corporate earnings, strong performance from semiconductor and AI-related infrastructure stocks, and economic optimism spurred a rally in August. However, equities reversed course in September.
- The European Central Bank (ECB) continued to suggest that it could raise its key deposit rate, which it did in the final month of the quarter, and signalled that further monetary policy tightening may be needed.
- Economic data was largely positive. Eurozone GDP expanded by 0.6% over the second quarter, up from no growth in the first quarter. The composite Purchasing Managers' Index (PMI) hit a three-and-a-half-year high in September, suggesting an improved outlook despite the uncertainty caused by the US/Iran conflict.
- However, eurozone annual inflation accelerated from 2.8% in June to 3.2% in August. This was largely due to higher energy prices.

Portfolio review

It was a challenging quarter for the fund, with the relative underperformance concentrated in July, when holdings exposed to the theme of AI enablement came under significant pressure. We had already begun moderating positions in certain areas of this allocation in June, but the portfolio retained a sizeable position, and the sharp reversal in these stocks consequently weighed on returns. While periods of severe counter-momentum shifts are not seasonally unusual, the scale and speed of the move were significantly greater than we would typically expect.

The July weakness impacted a number of our AI-related holdings, including STMicroelectronics, ASML, Nokia, Prysmian and Siemens Energy.

More positively, a number of our banking holdings, including Dutch lender ABN Amro, Spanish-listed BBVA and Austrian bank Erste Group, were among the top performers. The sector benefited from resilient earnings trends and expectations of higher-for-longer interest rates, while ABN Amro's shares were also supported by positive sentiment towards its restructuring efforts.

Elsewhere, measurement technology group Hexagon contributed after delivering a strong set of results. We continue to see value in the company's core business, supported by a robust product pipeline, an experienced management team, and longer-term optionality from its industrial AI and humanoid robotics initiatives.

Oil and gas company TotalEnergies was another notable outperformer. Oil prices rose sharply in the quarter due to ongoing supply disruptions linked to the unresolved US/Iran conflict.

In terms of activity, we focused on rebalancing our AI positions in response to shifting market dynamics. Price action over the summer in the AI universe, particularly among semiconductor companies, suggested to us that the sector could be entering a phase of slower growth, with a potential rollover in memory pricing adding to near-term risks. At the same time, increasing circularity across the AI value chain and higher bond yields pointed to a less supportive market backdrop. Taken together, these factors support a more balanced portfolio stance.

We used the rebound in semiconductor-related stocks in late July and August to reduce our position in this area, for example by exiting the holding in STMicroelectronics. We also took profits in other holdings in the broader AI ecosystem, exiting our positions in Siemens Energy and Linde, where we felt valuations had become less compelling.

On the other side, we added positions in selected stocks perceived as “AI losers”, where weaker share price performance has improved the risk/return profiles. These included Italian IT services firm Reply and French advertising firm Publicis. We also initiated a position in Merck, a German conglomerate operating across life sciences, pharmaceuticals and electronics. The earnings outlook appears to be improving after several years of downgrades. A key driver is the normalisation of its life sciences business following a post-Covid inventory unwind, which may enable the company to return to its previous compounding trajectory.

Manager outlook

The situation in the Middle East remains fluid, with intermittent signs of diplomatic progress between the US and Iran continuing to alternate with renewed outbreaks of hostilities. This prolonged period of uncertainty has meant expectations for higher inflation have remained elevated. It has also contributed to the recent rise in global long-term bond yields to multi-year highs. As a result, investor attention has shifted towards the interest rate outlook, with developments in bond markets likely to remain a key driver of both asset returns and market leadership through the remainder of the year.

Another important debate centres on the durability of the AI-driven investment theme that has dominated equity markets for much of the past two years. While companies exposed to semiconductors and AI infrastructure have continued to deliver strong growth and earnings momentum, history suggests that sharp reversals in share-price leadership can precede a moderation in underlying expectations for growth. Against this backdrop, we have adopted a balanced stance towards the AI theme. At the same time, we retain overweight positions in sectors that tend to be sensitive to yields, such as financials and energy.

In Europe, the economic backdrop has continued to improve gradually since the start of the year. Leading indicators have shown increasing signs of stabilisation, most notably in Germany, where the manufacturing PMI returned to expansionary territory for the first time in over three years in January and gradually strengthened thereafter towards a multi-year high. This improvement has been reinforced by a broadly supportive second-quarter earnings season.

In managing the portfolio, we remain focused on bottom-up stock selection, maintaining balanced exposure across cyclical and typically more defensive businesses. We also aim to selectively position the portfolio to potentially benefit from both Europe's global champions and areas offering leverage to an improving domestic economic backdrop.

Fund specific risks

Shares can lose value rapidly, and typically involve higher risks than bonds or money market instruments. The value of your investment may fall as a result. Active management techniques that have worked well in normal market conditions could prove ineffective or negative for performance at other times. High exposure to a particular country or geographical region carries a higher level of risk than a more broadly diversified portfolio. When a portfolio is concentrated (has a significant portion of its assets invested in a limited number of holdings), an adverse event impacting even a small number of holdings could create significant volatility or losses. Derivatives may be used with the aim of reducing risk or managing the portfolio more efficiently. However, this introduces other risks, in particular, that a derivative counterparty may not meet its contractual obligations. Securities could become hard to value or to sell at a desired time and price, especially in extreme market conditions when asset prices may be falling, increasing the risk of investment losses. Losses could be incurred if a counterparty became unwilling or unable to meet its obligations, or as a result of failure or delay in operational processes or the failure of a third party provider.
