PORTFOLIO COMMENTARY

Perkins US Mid Cap Value

Market Environment

- The market continued its rally as lower-quality factors such as high-beta stocks and non-earners drove the index, similar to previous quarters in 2020.
- The magnitude of growth's outperformance narrowed during the period, as cyclicals such as energy and financials led the market higher.

Performance Summary

The Portfolio underperformed its benchmark, the Russell Midcap® Value Index, for the quarter ended December 31, 2020. Stock selection in real estate, communication services and information technology hurt relative returns, while the portfolio's overweight position in financials and selection in consumer discretionary and industrials were additive.

Portfolio Discussion

Driven by positive vaccine news, the index posted a strong quarter. Our more defensively oriented portfolio captured 90% of the gains in the period. The Portfolio's misses in a 20% quarter for the index mostly were relative rather than due to any stock-specific declines. All sectors in the portfolio posted positive returns for the period.

Real estate, which had been an area of strength for us in previous quarters, was a notable laggard for the portfolio on a relative basis. Our defensively oriented holdings in the sector did not perform as well those in the index. Similarly, our holdings in communication services and technology did not keep pace. At the individual stock level, the two largest detractors from relative performance were environmental services consulting firm Alliant Corp and insurance provider RenaissanceRe Holdings.

Consumer discretionary was a bright spot for the portfolio, with Levi Strauss & Co. outperforming as it continued to successfully sell products in the direct-to-consumer channel. QVC's parent company Qurate Retail, Inc. also outperformed as it executed well in the pandemic environment and paid large special dividends.

Financials were strong during the period, as banks benefited from a steepening of the yield curve as well as from positive sentiment that the vaccine will lead to a quick recovery and fewer credit losses. We continue to favor banks as they are well capitalized and trading at attractive valuations, and our overweight position contributed on a relative basis.

During the period we added to consumer discretionary and industrials and reduced our holdings in consumer staples, real estate and utilities.

Manager Outlook

As we bid “good riddance” to 2020, we need to contemplate what the road ahead will look like. It is difficult to imagine a repeat of this past year, but we also must understand that a return to “normal” will be a process and not just occur once vaccinations are widespread. Equity markets at all-time highs belie the fact that damage has been done to the economy and the healing process will take time. We see reasons to be optimistic but also are cautious given the recovery over the past nine months. In addition, we are hopeful that value will show improvement and believe higher-quality stocks provide an opportunity for investors given their meaningful lag versus lower-quality stocks.

2020 saw unprecedented stimulus by governments and central banks globally, and while the amount could slow meaningfully, it is our belief that stimulus will not go away. In the U.S., stimulus programs that showered the markets with liquidity allowed even consumers who were temporarily unemployed to have greater discretionary income than if they had been working. Undoubtedly, these coordinated efforts helped to boost the prices of risk assets around the world. Even though the U.S. will run a $3 trillion budget deficit this year, we believe the will to spend more at the fiscal level likely will continue, thus providing a further tailwind for markets. For years, central banks have been hungry for inflation and this wish might be granted in 2021. Euphoria and unabashed bullishness have been on display in equities since the March lows, from a plethora of initial public offerings (IPOs) with questionable business models and frothy valuations to the proliferation of free trading, creating an “everything rally” in 2020 that seemed to position everyone to win.

We believe earnings growth in 2021 is likely to be strong, coming off one of the biggest declines in history. This growth could be most pronounced in areas such as cyclicals and banks – sectors that sustained some of the biggest pandemic earnings hits and where we believe the Portfolio should benefit given our material exposure there. At least for the coming year, we believe the value segment is well positioned. We remain convinced that over the long term, investing in companies with strong balance sheets, durable franchises and other quality attributes will again become important contributors to outperformance.

Thank you for your co-investment in the Mid Cap Value Portfolio.

For equity portfolios, relative contribution compares the performance of a security in the portfolio to the benchmark's total return, factoring in the difference in weight of that security in the benchmark. Returns are calculated using daily returns and previous day ending weights rolled up by ticker, gross of advisory fees, may exclude certain derivatives and will differ from actual performance.

Investing involves risk, including the possible loss of principal and fluctuation of value.

Perkins US Mid Cap Value Composite, benchmarked to the Russell Midcap® Value Index, includes portfolios that are broadly diversified and seek to identify quality mid-sized companies trading at discounted prices with favorable risk/reward potential. Portfolios invest primarily in US companies whose market capitalization, at time of initial purchase, fall within the 12-month average of the capitalization range of the Russell Midcap Value Index. Prior to 2003, the composite was known as the Berger Mid Cap Value Equity Composite. Prior to 2003 the composite included both institutional accounts and mutual funds. In 2003 and 2004 the composite include only separately managed institutional accounts. Effective January 1, 2005 the composite definition was changed to include sub-advised pooled funds as well as separately managed institutional accounts. Effective January 1, 2009 the composite definition was expanded to also include proprietary mutual funds. A minimum asset size requirement of $1 million for composite participation was used prior to January 1, 2006. The composite was created in December 1998.

Beta measures the volatility of a security or portfolio relative to an index. Less than one means lower volatility than the index; more than one means greater volatility.
